

Abstract

The aim of the invention is to extend a range of antiviral drugs by using entovirons in the form of components of an insect hemolymph exhibiting a direct antiviral action. The entovirons obtainable from Odonata, Coleoptera, Lepidoptera and Diptera representatives are most efficient in the form of drug prototypes.